WHAT ARE WE TRYING TO ACHIEVE?

OBJECTIVE → AUDIENCE → MESSAGE → CHANNEL → OUTCOME

For Communications Executives, junior practitioners and executives moving into Corporate | Strategic Communications.

A Foundation Programme for Communications Executives

Communications is more than writing press releases, creating content or managing social media. Effective communications begins with understanding the organisation, its objectives, its stakeholders and the environment in which it operates.

THINK COMMS introduces new Communications Executives to the fundamentals of strategic communications and helps them develop the mindset required to move beyond simply executing communication tasks to understanding the purpose behind them.

Through practical exercises, real-world scenarios and discussions, participants will learn how to identify communication needs, understand and prioritise stakeholders, develop effective messages, select appropriate communication channels and recognise potential reputational issues.

Learning Outcomes

By the end of the programme, participants will be able to:

01 Explain the role and value of strategic communications within an organisation

02 Distinguish between communication strategy, tactics and channels

03 Translate organisational objectives into communication objectives

04 Identify and prioritise key audiences and stakeholders

05 Understand the fundamentals of organisational reputation and issues management

06 Apply a simple strategic communications framework to everyday communication challenges

Your Trainer

is a strategic communications practitioner with more than 30 years of experience helping organisations across ASEAN, the Middle East and the Americas navigate change, manage reputation and communicate with purpose. As Principal of LK&A and Lead Expert Trainer, she brings extensive industry experience to LK&A Comms Academy.

Her expertise spans corporate communications, crisis communications, media relations, internal communications, branding and sustainability communications. Through the Academy, she focuses on helping practitioners think clearly about what their organisations need, who they must engage and how communications can contribute to meaningful outcomes.

An Adjunct Professor at Multimedia University, Liz contributed to the development of its Bachelor of Strategic Communications programme in 2016. She also serves on the Board of Studies for its Masters in Strategic Communication programme. Her contribution to education is recognised through the comms best student award - PERMATA Liz Kamaruddin Communication Excellence Award.

Liz's approach to training connects communications knowledge with the questions practitioners face at work:

- What are we trying to achieve?
- Who needs to hear this?
- What should we say and do?

She encourages participants to question assumptions, understand stakeholders and make informed decisions in their daily work. This reflects the purpose of LK&A Comms Academy: Building the Communicators Organisations Need.
